During Fire Drill

Engineering Gets Accredited

By FRANK DiBUGNARA

To most of those students who remained on the Cal State L.A. campus late last Friday afternoon, the fire drill was just another inconvenience.

But to those who had to file out of the engineering building, the raucous buzzers and wailing sirens which sounded at 3 p.m. had great significance.

As a result of a remarkable coincidence, the drill and the resulting evacuation occurred simultaneously with receipt of a letter stating that the division of engineering had received its long-sought accreditation.

William G. Plumtree, professor of engineering, excitedly announced the news while students were still lingering outside the building.

He displayed a copy of the letter from the Engineers' Council for Professional Development announcing that the following action had been taken:

"Engineering...Accredit for 6 years till 1971." Prof. Plumtree, a 10-year veteran of the division and former acting chairman, personally communicated the work of the success to his colleagues.

"We're all so happy!...We're right up there with the best," exclaimed Prof. Plumtree, who pointed out that the division was the first in the California State College system to receive the maximum 6-year accreditation on the first attempt.

Dr. Carrol M. Beeson, professor of engineering and chairman, had gone home in expectation of a Monday announcement. When called and told of the accreditation, he expressed elated delight.

Sounding a note of confidence, Victor Payse, Jr., assistant professor of engineering, proclaimed, "We only got what we deserved!"

The first effect of ECPD accreditation will be felt later this year with the official establishment of a masters program in electrical engineering. Graduate courses in civil and mechanical engineering will begin in 1966.

Graduates covered by the accreditation include those of June 1965. Its benefits include easier acceptance into graduate programs of other schools and increased job opportunities, particularly with regard to a few firms which do not consider nonaccredited graduates.

The Engineers' Council for Professional Development is made up of members from 10 professional engineering societies. Yearly, it chooses teams from the membership of its societies to inspect the schools which apply for accreditation.

The team visiting Cal State L.A. was led by chairman John S. McNow, dean of the school of engineering and architecture at the University of Kansas.

The other 3 were professors W.H. Hughes of Oklahoma State University, Ralph Nevins of Kansas State University, and R.C. Rautenstrauss of the University of Colorado.

The division prepared for the visit by putting together a report containing information on its administration, faculty, facilities, library, financial status, and curriculum. Displays of course material, including course outlines, notes, examinations, examples of student work, and papers and textbooks written by faculty members were made available to the ECPD team.

In Dr. Beeson's opinion, the greatest significance of the maximum term of accreditation is that the next inspection, in 1971, will be concentrated on the masters program.

"We have our work cut out for us," said Dr. Beeson in emphasizing the necessity that the division bring the graduate curriculum to ECPD standards by that time.

In a message published in the State Engineer last April, Leslie Cromwell, professor of engineering, said, "It is extremely important that we become accredited and so have the recognition of our profession. All of you will benefit to be graduated from an ECPD-accredited school."

Air Force Band to Play

Sergeants 'Singing' at Noon

The toe-tapping, hand-clapping rhythm of the march will greet Cal State L.A. students when the United States Air Force Band and its glee club, the Singing Sergeants, perform at noon today in the gym.

Not confined to marches, the versatile group will mix jazz, opera, symphony and folksongs into the program. The band includes a symphony orchestra, a symphonic band, a tour band, a glee club (the Sergeants), 4 dance bands (including the "Airmen of Note" and the "Diplomats,") and even a bagpipe group.

Though the band plays standards, about 40 per cent of the numbers are original. Most of the material is arranged by the composing and arranging staff of the USAF band.

While touring the U.S., the band made 10 international goodwill tours between 1950-60 and was termed "the best ambassador America has ever sent to Germany" by the Honorable Hans H. Redhammer, mayor of Wiesbaden.

Placement Offers Christie Fellowship

The Vera Christie Grad-Fellowship, sponsored by the Western College Placement Association is awarding $1200 to be disbursed at intervals to eligible candidates for research in specific areas.

The purpose of the fellowship is to stimulate study in the recruitment and placement aspects of personnel and to meet the needs for research into the philosophy, standards, practices, and objectives of recruitment, selection and placement of college graduates.

To be eligible for the fellowship a person must be a candidate for the master's or doctorate degree at a college or university which is a member of the Western College Placement Association.

The research topic, selected by the applicant and approved by his adviser, should constitute, in part or whole, the thesis for his degree. A faculty member of any college or institution in the placement association can also apply.

Suggested research areas are economic implications of recruitment and placement activities; psychological aspects of placement and recruitment; methods and procedures in placement and recruiting; statistics and data reporting; functions, responsibilities and inter-relationships of employers.

Applications can be obtained from Beverly Zoln, supervisor of occupational placement in Ad. 142. Applications must be turned in by Dec. 1, 1965. Announcement of the award will be made on Jan. 21, 1966.

Art Professor On Council

Charles E. Borman, assistant professor of art, has been elected to serve a 2 year term on the Southern Area Council of the California Art Education Association.

Prof. Borman's work has been in numerous exhibitions in Southern California and in 1963 he received the purchase award at the 11th All-City Art Festival in Los Angeles.

The Singing Sergeants joined the band on the tours but have also appeared with the New York Philharmonic and the Philadelphia, Cleveland and National Symphony orchestras.

The band has broadcast programs world-wide over Radio Free Europe, Voice of America and the Armed Forces Radio and TV Service. Radio programs have included "United Nations Serenade," "Salute to Britain," and "Salute to Japan."

The band was organized in June of 1942 as the official musical representative of the United States Army Air Corps. The unit was primarily formed to give the Air Force a counterpart of the United States Army, Navy and Marine bands.

In the early war years, the band auditioned nearly 1,500 musicians to fill only 100 openings. Members were finally chosen from the Philadelphia Orchestra, the Boston Pops, the Tommy Dorsey band and the Arthur Pryer concert band.

After practicing for 2 months, the band toured Eastern Canada where Edward Wodson, music editor of the Toronto Evening Telegram, called it "glorious band. When comes another?"

The now famous group returned briefly to the U.S. and performed at a White House command performance. The band then made an extensive tour of Europe and remained until the conclusion of the Battle of the Bulge.

The end of the war brought a brief disbandment of the unit when rapid demobilization reduced the 100-man band to only 5 men. Most of the musicians had returned to civilian orchestras.

The Air Force didn't want to lose its band, however, and asked Colonel George S. Howard, Pennsylvania State University professor of music, to remain and rebuild the group. He did so and within 2 years had formed a new Air Force band. The new members were from 20 different symphony orchestras and 16 dance bands.

Student Freedom AAUP Concern

The American Association of University Professors (AAUP) is becoming more aware of student political activity.

"One of the big issues of the AAUP has been academic freedom for the faculty. We're now becoming more concerned with academic freedom for students," says Julian B. Roth, professor of education and 1966 president of the Cal State L.A. chapter of the AAUP.

In addition to defending academic freedom, the AAUP is involved with maintaining academic and professional standards, promoting the faculty role in college and university government, improving faculty salaries and fringe benefits, and defending tenure rights.

The CCLA chapter, which ordinarily meets once a month, is currently engaged in a membership campaign.

The present membership is approximately 300. Eligibility requires faculty appointment for at least a year and work consisting of at least half-time teaching or research.

Junior membership is open to those persons who are, or within 5 years have been, a graduate student in an approved institution and aren't eligible for active membership. Associate membership is open to active or junior members whose work becomes primarily administrative.

O'Neill Play To Open

Eugene O'Neill's tragedy, "A Touch of the Poet," which made its Broadway debut 5 seasons ago, will open a limited run Nov. 12 in the Theater.

'Impressed'
By 'Parable'By RAY FOWLER
Freshman French Major

Can it possibly be true?

This is my first year at Cal State L.A. and when I read Paul Thaxter's "A Parable for True Believers" I was impressed. Here, I thought, was proof that this is not simply a "diploma mill" attended by those strongly committed to preserving the status quo, but an institution with maturity; a true marketplace of ideas and exchange of viewpoints.

I looked forward for the exchange which I anticipated would be "heated" at least. Nothing. All that followed was a shrill monologue by those who felt their toes stepped on.

Rather than accept Thaxter's work as a valid observation, they interpreted it as a blatant attack on all they held near and dear. . . which only served to make his observation more valid.

Miss Bolcimper, who appears to hold her religious beliefs as closely and irrationally as Linus does his blanket, may have a genuine need for emotional hand-holding, and on that basis should certainly be indulged without anyone sniping at her.

However, I take umbrage at her egocentric claim that because I don't happen to share her viewpoint on deities and other myths, that my life is necessarily lacking in either beauty or joy.

She (and her fellow travelers) are correct in pointing a pious finger and saying I walk along . . . but I view that as one of the advantages of rejecting God, Mother-Love, and fear of the dark.

I'm not fearful of assuming responsibility for my life; I'll accept accolades for the good and pay the price for the bad. Also, unlike the gentle Christians, I have developed an appreciation for man and his pathetic attempts to create order from the chaos of religion and other forms of histrionics.

There is also in my iconoclast's heart a tolerance and understanding for Miss Bolcimper and other believers in The Word. . . something unknown to the Christian Ideal as their letters prove.

My purpose in writing this was not to attempt in any way to bring reason to bear against the naked emotionalism of the righteous (which would be futile), but rather to make a more important comment.

While I am able to forgive the Christians their hate letters, I am at a loss to understand the lack of positive response. Perhaps I missed the issue containing these fragments of reality? (Editor's Note: You didn't.)

(And why, Mr. Thaxter, did you bother to print your "Open Letter?" I saw no reason to defend your stand, and I'm afraid it appeared as though that is what you were doing.)

Where, where is the minority voice? Are the possessors of reason frightened by the tender techniques of Christian censure?

Congratulations to the Christians for rallying around their banner, bloody as it is, and fle on all the "safe" rational beings!

Thaxter, place my name on your side of the scorecard; we'll never win the war, it seems, but we have a chance in the battle of our own destinies if we press on!

Hallberg Praises
Act Withdrawal

The deletion of the Internal Security Act provision for student groups was praised as a mature action by Edmond Hallberg, dean of Students.

After investigation in an open hearing showed the ISA to be inappropriate as a criterion for the recognition of campus groups, the Board of Directors deleted the ISA as a requirement for students groups on campus and substituted a disclaimer clause.

The ISA provision had been inserted to protect the name of the college as not endorsing the viewpoint of any particular student group. The role of a public institution of higher education is by definition without a political position, according to Dr. Hallberg.

A public college or university is a free market place of ideas, as long as what is proposed is within the law and the scope of the Constitution, said Dr. Hallberg.

A public school should not present a partisan viewpoint and for a college to do so would make it less of a college because of the restrictions of student opinion, according to Dr. Hallberg.

He emphasized of a public institution is a forum for ideas.

Editor's Note: Due to mechanical circumstances, the following names were deleted from last Monday's list of freshman scholars honored last week for achievement of scholastic recognition in high school:

Susan Olson, Temple City High; Dennis P. Shambaugh, Covina High; Peggy Lee Test, Edgewood High in West Covina; Thomas J. Brassfield, California High in Whittier.

Two members of the Notre Dame debate squad are currently appearing with members of the Cal State L.A. squad at local high schools and several civic clubs.

Howard Dooley and Ronald Burke of Notre Dame will debate with 2 different CSCLA squad each day, according to Paul Balles, instructor in speech.

The formal debate topic is, "that law enforcement agencies should have greater freedom in the investigation and prosecution of crime."

Both teams will participate in the Loyola invitational tournament this weekend.

Balles said that this is the first public debate series of this year. Last year Cal State L.A. hosted the University of Pittsburgh.

The CSCLA team will travel to Pittsburgh in December, according to Balles. He hopes to have Dartmouth College here for the 2nd public series in February.

LESSEE, WHERE'S THE BALL?—Water polo players look for ball in recent match. The Diablos came up with a 9-4 win over San Fernando Valley State last weekend. Coach Dave Glander's team will host Cal Poly (SLO) in a contest Friday afternoon.

Poloists Dunk Valley State

Cal State L.A. built up a 8-2 lead at the end of 3 quarters and coasted to an easy 9-4 victory over an outmanned San Fernando Valley State squad in water polo action last Friday.

Coach Dave Glander wasn't too worried about the Matadors - he started the 2nd team, except for Dick Drumm, who led all scorers with 3 goals.

"Moode really played well," Glander said, "He's the one who started us off with his 2 goals." Moode also alternated in the goal besides playing an outstanding game in the field.

Glander was especially happy that the Diablos got off to an early lead, "In all the other games, we were down a goal or 2 before we got started."

He also commented on the number of close games his finmen have been involved in lately, "We finally got off that 1 point stuff."

Glander hopes his team can have some more breathers so he can get more people to play. He used 15 different players against the Matadors.

Of the 22 players on the squad, 21 will be back next year. That is the most returning players Glander has ever had.

In a game played after the varsity contest, the reserves shut out the San Fernando Valley State JVs 6-0.

Cal Poly (SLO) will provide the opposition Friday afternoon at 3:30 in the Diablos' pool. Glander looks for a close game as the Mustangs beat the Diablos 3-2 last year.

Harriers Run 2nd In Mt. SAC Meet

Cal State L.A.'s cross country team finished 2nd in the 3.4-mile Mt. SAC Invitational run last Saturday afternoon.

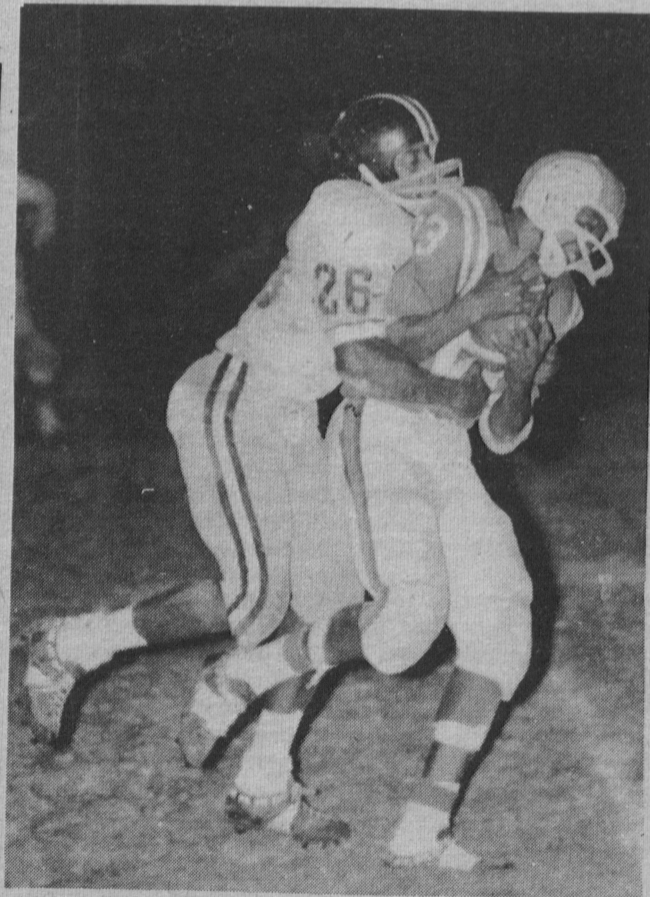

San Diego State literally ran away with first place. The Aztecs had a low score of 19.

The runnerup Diablos had 83! San Diego, needless-to-say, has one of the best cross country teams in the nation.

Chuck Levo took 3rd in the competition with a 16:24 time. Paul Porter finished 14th with a 17:22. Dave Kemp ran 19th with 17:37. Ray Schrudder had a 17:53 for 22nd.

Bob Blanchard, usually the fastest Diablo, finished 25th with a 18:01. Ralph Peabody was 34th with 18:28.

The harriers will run in the Aztec Invitational at San Diego this Saturday.

WHERE THERE'S A WILL—ARD—There's Jess Willard hauling down another enemy receiver in recent game. He'll be in action against Cal Poly (SLO) Saturday night.
