Abstract
of
A COMMUNITY SERVICE DIRECTORY FOR YOLO COUNTY
by
Amy Irene Bennett

The problem this author has identified is that there is no printed community service directory for Yolo County. In order to provide a printed directory to fill this gap, the author recognizes that there are two purposes for this project. The first purpose of this project is to develop a comprehensive community service directory in the Yolo County area in both Spanish and English for community members in Yolo County seeking local resources. The community service directory will provide access to local resources for Yolo County members without internet access or computer skills. The second purpose of this project is to develop a grant proposal for funding to have the directory printed and distributed. Sources of data for the development of this project included a review of related literature in vocational rehabilitation counseling; community resources, case management, and rural area literature; journal articles, books, and internet sites detailing research and studies related to Yolo County; unpublished masters' projects and theses, and agency handouts and pamphlets. The author also consulted Yolo County agency and non-profit organizations representatives through email, telephone and in-person interviews and meetings. A Community Service Directory for Yolo County was developed in both Spanish and English to provide a list of local services for Yolo

County members. A grant proposal for funds to have the directory published and distributed was also developed.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Thank you Dr. Guy Deaner for your guidance and patience throughout my time in the graduate program. I also appreciate all the support and advice I have had from Almon L. Holmes while working as an intern for the Department of Rehabilitation.

Special thanks go out to Michael F. Ramirez for his great support, friendship and tireless efforts to help me complete my project. Spencer W. Hoke also gave invaluable assistance and comradeship throughout my graduate program, foremost for telling me about the program in the beginning. Recognition also goes to Roman for translating the directory into Spanish.

My parents were always supportive, for which I am very grateful. And thank you to my sister Susan and nephew Bryce for visiting when I needed a break.

Chapter 1

INTRODUCTION

Background of the Problem

Having a disability can often serve as a barrier for individuals who are seeking employment. However, as Martin (2007) points out, a disability is a “dynamic phenomenon affected by interactions with others and with the environment”(p. 85). One of the roles of a vocational rehabilitation counselor, a counselor who assists individuals with disabilities seeking employment, is to assist in addressing environmental factors that may be adding additional barriers to employment. Unfortunately, a greater number of individuals with disabilities are unemployed than that of the general population (Oliver, 2005). According to the most recent United States Bureau of Labor Statistics (2011) findings, the unemployment rate for individuals with a disability is 14.5 percent, which is higher than the rate for those with no disability, which is 9.0 percent.

When working with individuals with disabilities who are seeking employment it is important to look at the person as a whole to be able to assist them fully in reaching their employment goals and help them overcome the barriers to employment. According to Martin (2007) one of the main roles of a counselor who works individuals with disabilities seeking employment is to assess the client needs, working with the client from a holistic perceptive. This means taking into account all aspects of the individual, including the person’s medical, psychological, educational, economic, and vocational characteristics. How these various characteristics interact and impact the individual can significantly affect the individual with a disability’s vocational rehabilitation success.

Part of this process is to address if the individual's basic needs are being met. These needs can include adequate medical care, food, housing, clothing, child care, and transportation (Crimando & Riggar, 2005). In this author's area of interest, Yolo County, the unemployment rate is about 2.5 percent higher than the national average (Community Services Planning Council of Yolo County, 2005). One way to address these barriers is to utilize resources available in the community. In order for one to utilize the resources available in the community one must have access to that information.

Statement of Problem

In working with consumers at the Department of Rehabilitation this author found that many of their basics needs were unmet, creating an additional barrier to employment. In order to best serve the consumer the author attempted to locate resources that might help the consumers meet their needs. Upon further research this author discovered that there are numerous resources available in the Yolo County area, the district that the Woodland Department of Rehabilitation serves. However, there is no printed directory guide that details these resources. This author did locate specific pamphlets that listed selected resources related to certain topics, such as child care. Although individual pamphlets are available there is no comprehensive, all inclusive directory.

In attempting to locate a community service directory for Yolo County that includes local community resources and essential information about each resource this author contacted Nancy Findeisen, the president and CEO of the community service planning council, who is responsible for putting out the community service directory and 211 data base for the Sacramento area. Ms. Findeisen stated that she did not know of any comprehensive community service directory available for the Yolo County area (N. Findeisen, personal communication, March 21, 2011). Ms. Findeisen referred this author to Patty Wong, the county Librarian/Archivist from the Yolo County Library, stating that she is the contact person for Yolo County regarding what community resources are available in the area. This author was able to connect with Ms. Wong, who explained that there is an online directory called YoloLINK, which she is currently in charge of maintaining as it is a product of Yolo County library.

YoloLINK is Yolo County's community resources database of organizations and programs that provide services to Yolo County residents. It supplies information about government and nonprofit agencies, elected officials, public schools, community groups, faith-based services, and special interest groups. She stated that there was no printed directory available, which she acknowledged can limit individuals in the community's access to the resources as many of the individuals seeking these resources may not have access to the internet or may not have the computer skills to navigate through this type of system. This author explained to Ms. Wong the components of her directory, and how it would differ. The printed directory would include community resources for child care, clothing, food, health resources, housing, job assistance, mental health service, and utilities (P. Wong, personal communication, March 23, 2011). The directory will also include local support group information.

Ms. Wong reinforced that there is a great need for this type of printed directory. She also highlighted how having such a directory would be a benefit because Yolo County is in the process of getting the 211 information line. According to the information and referral guide on the 211.org website, individuals in the community can call 211 for local free and confidential information and referral (Information and Referral Guide, n.d.). Individuals can call 211 for help with food, housing, employment, health care, counseling and more. However, it is important to point out that the directory would be separate from 211, as 211 would be an information line.

This author also noted that many of the consumers of the Department of Rehabilitation either did not have computers with which they could access resource information on sites such as YoloLINK. Others did not have the computer skills to navigate the computer and the different resource sites. This was another reason that this author felt a printed directory would be beneficial as individuals without computer access or skills could use it.

Due to the large Hispanic population in Yolo County this author felt it would be beneficial to have both an English and Spanish copy of the directory. In Yolo County, according to the 2010 United States Census Bureau 30% of the population in Yolo County is Hispanic, with 20.6% of the population speaking only Spanish at home (United States Census Bureau, 2011). If the directory was available in Spanish, in addition to English, a greater number of individuals would have access to the information regarding the resources. This author contacted appropriate sources to have the directory translated into Spanish.

The secondary problem that this project will address is that of lack of funding available for a resource directory to be printed and distributed. Ms. Wong and Ms. Findeisen both expressed that there was no funding for this type of printed directory (Findeisen, personal communication, March 21, 2011; Wong, personal communication, March 24, 2011). This is a significant problem as the resources identified in the directory will continue to go unused if the directory is not accessible to the community. As there is a lack of funding available for a printed directory this author will develop and submit a grant proposal to address this issue. The grant proposal will request funds to have the directory published and widely distributed in the community.

While researching companies that funded projects in the Northern California area, this author located Wells Fargo Corporate Giving. Wells Fargo Corporate Giving supports projects that are focused on improving low-income communities in Northern California, including Yolo County. The author noted that Wells Fargo Corporate Giving only contributes to organizations with tax-exempt status under Section 501(c)(3) of the U.S. Internal Revenue Code. Because of the criteria specified by the Wells Fargo Corporate Giving this author began to research non-profit organizations that services the Yolo County community.

As this author had worked with PRIDE Industries, a non-profit organization that assists individuals with disabilities seek and retain employment, she contacted them to discuss partnering on the grant proposal. This author believed that this organization would take an interest in partnering on the grant proposal to Wells Fargo Corporate Giving as they have an office in Woodland, one of the central cities in Yolo County. The author then met with Sharon Mandy, Vice President of Rehabilitation of PRIDE Industries. Sharon Mandy reviewed the community service directory and stated that the PRIDE Industries Foundation, a sub set of PRIDE Industries, would partner with this author on the project (S. Mendy, personal communication, October 7, 2011).

Purpose of the Project

The purpose of this project is to develop a community resource directory in both English and Spanish for the Yolo County area and the individuals living in this community. This project is needed because if there is not awareness or access to information about the resources that are currently available in the community these resources will not be utilized and unemployment barriers will be maintained.

A community service resource directory would serve as a tool for providing easy access to information for community members to be able to locate and utilize the resources that are available in their area. Community members without computer access or skills would be able to utilize the directory and gain awareness of the resources available to them.

Because the community service directory would be available in both Spanish and English, a greater number of individuals would be able to gain knowledge of the different resources available in the community. Thirty percent of the Yolo population is Hispanic and this directory would allow them access to information regarding resources that they might not otherwise be aware of.

The second propose of this project is to develop and submit a grant proposal to Wells Fargo Corporate Giving, in collaboration with PRIDE Industries, to have the directory published and circulated in the community, resulting in a better awareness in the community of what resources are available.

Definition of Terms

Barriers to Employment

A barrier to employment is anything which makes an individual unemployable or unattractive to the employer. Barriers may stem from the individual's physical, emotional or social traits; present, past temporary or permanent life situation; beliefs or attitudes; work-related or personal issues; skills, aptitudes or experience (Angel & Harney, 1997).

Basic Needs

Clients' basic needs are requirements for survival, security, love and esteem, and growth. These translate to the basics--food, clothing, shelter, health, and employment (Crimando & Riggard, 2005).

Case Management

Case management is typically viewed as a process that involves the timely coordination of an array of services to meet an individual's need in a cost effective manner (Chan, Leahy, & Saunders, 2005).

Community Resource

A community resource is defined as any service vendor- public or private, fee-charging or not-available within a specific geographic area that potentially can be used to clients, counselors or organizations (Crimando & Riggard, 2005).

Department of Rehabilitation

The Department of Rehabilitation (DOR) is a state and federally funded program that assists individuals with disabilities in California obtain and retain employment and increase their ability to live independently in their communities. Employment preparation services offered by the Department of Rehabilitation include training, education, transportation and job placement (California Department of Rehabilitation [DOR], n.d.).

Individual with a Disability

An individual with a disability is defined by the ADA as a person who has a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits one or more major life activities, a person who has a history or record of such impairment, or a person who is perceived by others as having such impairment (Americans with Disability Act, 1990).

Vocational Rehabilitation Counselor

The Vocational Rehabilitation Counselor evaluates the vocational rehabilitation potential and eligibility of persons with physical and mental disabilities. The Vocational Rehabilitation Counselor analyzes medical, psychological and vocational information in order to develop (DOR, n.d.).

YoloLINK is Yolo County's community resources database of organizations and programs that provide services to Yolo County residents. It supplies detailed information about government and nonprofit agencies, elected officials, public schools, community groups, faith-based services, special interest groups, and more (YoloLINK).

Limitations of the Project

Limitations of this project include the time frame in which the data was collected. The data for this project was complied in spring and fall of 2011. As this data was collected only for the year of 2011 it will likely become outdated as the scope of services provided by the community service agencies will change. There are also geographical limitations as this directory will only be covering the community service resources available in the Yolo County area. The population that this directory is intended for is individuals with disabilities, other community members and agency representatives in the Yolo County area. Author bias is another limitation of the project that needs to be noted. This bias includes the author's focus on including resources that she has identified as most valuable to assisting individuals with disabilities in meeting their basic needs. The grant proposal included in this project is limited to fall 2011; the time frame during which this project was developed.

Organization of the Remainder of the Project

The remainder of the project will include the following: Chapter 2, a review of related literature, which will provide a current overview of literature related to the project; Chapter 3 discusses the methodology used to produce the project; Chapter 4 contains a summary of the project with recommendations for further research. Appendix A is Interview Questions Asked of Listed Agencies or Services. Appendix B is A Community Service Directory for Yolo County, English Version. Appendix C is A Community Service Directory for Yolo County, Spanish Version. Appendix D is the grant proposal to Wells Fargo Corporate Giving.

Chapter 2

REVIEW OF RELATED LITERATURE

Introduction

This literature review consists of six parts. First, a review of literature regarding the need for community resources is examined. Secondly, the importance of assisting the consumer as a whole is addressed. Then case management and how it relates to rehabilitation counseling is considered. The sections following look at the needs of the individual consumer and the rehabilitation counselor as advocate, finally, rural areas as it relates to the rehabilitation counselor is analyzed.

Need for Community Resources

A problem for many counselors is not having enough time and resources to meet service expectations (Crimando & Riggard, 2005). Large caseloads result in counselors not being able to address the needs of many of their consumers. Knowledge of community facilities could improve services and decrease counselor activity, which would result in counselors having more time to dedicate to other issues of the consumer. In addition, Chan et al. (2005) point out that society should be responsible, through all possible public and private agencies, for the providing of services and opportunities to people with disabilities. Chan et al. (2005) suggest that rehabilitation programs must be carried out with interdisciplinary and interagency integration. The authors continue that self-help organizations are important partners in the rehabilitation effort and that effective distribution of information concerning community resources can be of benefit to persons with disabilities.

According to Chan et al. (2005) coordination of services can often require referral to community resources. The authors note that in order to know what community resources to refer clients to, the rehabilitation counselor must learn the resources and develop knowledge of other agencies. Reviews of community resource manuals and through visits or telephone calls with community resources, the case manager can gain further knowledge of agency requirements for client referrals. According to the authors, effective use of community resource requires focusing on the client's needs. An assessment of client needs can be done to identify the services that will assist the client (Chan et al., 2005). The authors point out that to help the clients in meeting their needs, rehabilitation counselors must know what resources are available, and how these resources can help to meet their case management needs.

Additionally, Chan et al. (2005) notes that many communities have community service directories that can provide information about services that can benefit individuals with disabilities. Community resources should be combined in a database or notebook and the information should be updated regularly with new resources added, and ineffective resources deleted (Chan et al., 2005). The availability of such a database, the authors add, will help teach clients how to assess community resources after their cases are closed. According to Chan et al. (2005) a combination of services, equal access to services, quality care, advocacy, and working with the whole person are very important aspects of rehabilitation counseling.

According to Seekins et al. (2011) the need for community resources and information is imperative as poverty and disability overlap. Roughly two-thirds of working-aged adults with consistent income poverty in the United States have at least one disability. The author continues, pointing out that 25.3 percent of adults with a disability between 21 and 64 years of age have incomes below the poverty line compared to just 9.6 percent of those who do not report a disability.

In order for the rehabilitation counselor to best help the consumer meet his or her individual needs, the counselor must have knowledge of the community and its resources. The counselor must help the client identify and understand the resources that are available to them in the community (Martin, 2007). “The rehabilitation counselor must be community-oriented as well as client-oriented (p.102).” Rehabilitation success has been dependent upon utilizing the different public and private resources in the community (Martin, 2007). According to Stough, Sharp, Decker, and Wilker (2010) it is important for a case manager to connect individuals with resources they are in need of. The function of the case manager is to integrate and coordinate services across different services delivery systems and to provide for continuity of care on behalf of the individual or group of individuals.

Consumer from a Holistic Perspective

One of the main roles of a vocational rehabilitation counselor is to assess consumer needs, working with the client from a holistic perceptive (Martin, 2007). Holism as it applies to people is “the notion that the totality of a person has a reality that is unique and a reality that is dependent upon the various attributes of that person” (p.91-92). He specifies the various attributes as the person’s medical, psychological, educational, economic, and vocational characteristics. How these various characteristics interact and impact the individual can significantly impact the consumer's vocational rehabilitation success (Martin, 2007). Hoerber (2001), also argues the importance of taking a holistic approach when working with individuals with disabilities, stating, "agencies need to take more of a holistic perspective; that is, as clients are not something that needs to be fixed. We need a hand up, not a hand out" (p.153).

To truly assist the consumer as a whole Crimando and Riggar (2005), describe the importance of locating and referring the consumer to community resources. Crimando and Riggar (2005) defines a community resource as any service vendor, public or private, fee-charging agency within a specific geographic area that potentially can be used to aid individuals. In order for a counselor to be able to best assist the consumers they are working with in identifying and selecting community resources they must have an understanding of which of the consumers individual needs are not being met (Crimando & Riggar, 2005).

Case Management

Chan et al. (2005) point out that there is a growing need to provide cross training among the multiple groups involved in case-management (e.g. nurses, rehabilitation counselors and social workers). Cross training would work to increase their knowledge of the entire rehabilitation process and what types of professionals can be involved in case management so that their specific knowledge is effectively used to address particular client issues effectively in the rehabilitation process.

According to Chan et al. (2005) effective case management of the rehabilitation counselor is a collaborative process which assesses, plans, implements, coordinates, monitors, and evaluates options and services to meet the individuals needs through communications and available resources to promote quality and cost effective outcomes. The authors continue, stating that proper case management is very important as this process involves the coordination of services to meet the needs of the individual in a cost effective manner.

Chan et al. (2005) highlights the importance of blending the traditional roles in rehabilitation counseling. The authors continue by pointing out that due to the rapid changes in the way case services are provided, case managers have had to expand their roles beyond what they have traditional been. This blending of roles, the authors point out, is seen as a positive move by leaders in the profession who note that, although rehabilitation counselors have unique skills and backgrounds, they must all began to identify as case managers in order to secure place in the changing field of service.

According to Chan et al. (2005) there are important principles that the case manager must take into account when working with clients. The strengths of people with disabilities should be focused on emphasized, supported, and developed. The authors also note that the rehabilitation counseling should be flexible to deal with the special characteristics of each person. The counseling rehabilitation process is complex and must continuously reexamination for each individual and for the program as a whole (Chan et al., 2005).

Maki and Riggar (2004) describe a case manager as a designated person who “organizes, coordinates, and sustains a network of formal and informal supports and activities designed to optimize the well-being and function of people with multiple needs” (p. 21). The authors point out that case management as being a collaborative process that assesses, plans, implements, coordinates, monitors, and evaluates the options and services to meet an individual’s needs, using communication and available resources to promote quality, cost-effective outcomes. The authors continue by noting the importance of case management, as it includes the coordination of human services. Rubin and Roessler (2008) discuss how case managers or counselors are professional whose multiple roles are used to help individuals with disabilities maximize the quality of their lives within difficult factors and forces.

Furthermore, the importance of assisting the consumer as a whole, assisting him or her in meeting their individual needs and the rehabilitation counselor as an advocate are also examined. Grubbs, Cassell and Mulkey (2006) explain how the characteristics of empowered clients exert a definite influence on caseload management and make up a significant element. These characteristics are not much different categorically from those involved in the personal element. That is, client’s attitudes, motivations, beliefs, perceptions, social factors, resilience, and general psychological make-up are integral parts of caseload management. The authors continue to state the importance of these elements as personality variables of self-esteem, self-acceptance attitudes, and expectations correlated with client rehabilitation success.

Needs of the Individual Consumer

In order to make the rehabilitation process a successful one the process must be individualized and flexible to adjust to each consumer’s unique situation (Martin, 2007). Although one’s disability must be taken into account, Martin (2007) explains that the rehabilitation process is “not an assembly line of delivered services based on the type of the disability” (p.90). Martin (2007) continues by describing his definition of a disability being a “dynamic phenomenon affected by interactions with others and with the environment “(p.85). Chan et al. (2005) clarifies the significance of disability is affected by the person’s feelings about the self and his/her situation. According to Martin (2007) when assessing the client the rehabilitation counselor must look at not only at the nature and extent of one’s disability but also must review the total health status of the client. In terms of psychological dysfunction, referral to counseling services could help to lessen the distress and impact that is often associated with disabilities (Martin, 2007).

Wiersma and Jurs (2008) describes how when working with consumers with mental illness, for example, many times they have unmet needs such as in the area of psychological distress, daytime activities, and social contacts. According to Bond, Resnick, Drake, Xie, McHugo, and Bebout (2001) working improves consumer’s quality of life as working is assumed to benefit consumers in non-vocational domains, for example, by increasing self-esteem and better control of psychiatric symptoms for consumers with mental health disorders.

Perceived barriers, according to Johannesen, MGrew, Griss, and Born (2009), and beliefs about one’s ability to overcome these barriers strongly influence the decision to work. Barriers stem from many circumstances, and they likely are multidimensional in terms of their impact and response to rehabilitation. The primary goal of vocational rehabilitation is to help consumers overcome barriers to work. Once employed, participants who evidenced positive change in total barriers worked nearly twice as many weeks as those who provided stable barrier ratings.

Rehabilitation Counselors as Advocates

According to Waldmann and Blackwell (2010) it is very important that rehabilitation counselors work as advocates to best assist client in removing any barriers that may affect employment and to promote empowerment by helping the clients essential needs be met. In this way, clients are given opportunity to become fully participating members of their communities. Advocacy is defined by Waldmann and Blackwell (2010) as “promoting the well-being of individuals and groups within systems and organizations” and that advocacy means that the rehabilitation counselor works to remove any barriers that reduces the clients access, growth and development. According to Waldmann and Blackwell (2010) advocacy comes into play by promoting the well-being of clients and addressing barriers in systems and organizations. In the practice of advocacy, counselors help to empower the client to take control of an area wherein he or she may feel helpless. Counselors need to address the impact any barriers have on the client, which can often lead to depression, low self-esteem, and lack of educational and career opportunities (Waldmann & Blackwell, 2010). According to Waldmann and Blackwell (2010) community collaboration, systems advocacy, public information, and social/political advocacy are all examples of advocacy. Community collaboration involves identifying environmental factors that affect the client’s development and developing contacts with agencies working for change (Waldmann & Blackwell, 2010).

According to Ratts and Hutchins (2009) rehabilitation counselors can advocate with clients outside of counseling sessions as well. Examples of self-advocacy skills include finding knowledgeable doctors and specialists, self-monitoring and adjusting activities and lifestyle, and finding new ways to accomplish tasks. The authors continue by discussing how a counselor can build the self-confidence of clients by helping them practice these skills and by providing them support in the world outside of the counseling session. Rehabilitation counselors, by virtue of their training and experience as well the definition of their job role, are best positioned to advocate on their clients' behalf becomes critical for individuals who lack access to needed services or resources (Ratts & Hutchins, 2009).

Maki and Riggan (2004) describe advocacy as being the action a counselor takes in assisting clients to achieve their goals through participating in their environments. The authors discuss how advocacy has a role in other functions of being a rehabilitation counselor, such as counseling and case management. The authors continue by addressing how important it is to teach clients to become self advocates which leads to individual growth and development.

Rural Areas as it Relates to the Rehabilitation Counselor

According to Lustig, Strauser, and Weems (2003) rural vocational rehabilitation counselors typically encounter difficulties when assisting individuals with disabilities obtain employment because of lack of transportation, limited employment opportunities, inadequate training and education options, and limited vocational rehabilitation services.

Lustig et al. (2003) states it is estimated that 23% of individuals in rural areas have a disability compared to 18% in metropolitan areas.

Rural America, Lustig et al. (2003) note, experiences higher unemployment, lower wages, higher rates of poverty, lower educational levels, limited public transportation and reduced access to healthcare. According to Lustig et al. (2003) rural rehabilitation consumers typically face higher rates of unemployment than their urban counterparts. Also, lack of public transportation has been identified as a critical problem. Inaccessible and unresponsive transportation is problematic both in the consumers' ability to access rehabilitation services and to travel to works sites. Forty percent of rural residents live in counties with no public transportation. Finally, rural rehabilitation consumers have more limited access to vocational rehabilitation, job placement specialists, supported employment, and independent living services (Lustig et al., 2003). According to Lustig et al. (2003) rural rehabilitation consumers may also have to travel long distances for vocational evaluation services or training options and mental health services in rural areas are more limited with fewer than 10% of rural counties having a psychiatrist. In addition, rural residents are more likely to not use mental health services because of a lack of valuing independence and privacy.

According to Johnstone, Vessell, Bounds, Hoskins, and Sherman (2003) rural individuals have higher rates of health problems. Johnstone et al. (2003) points out that although 20% of the US population is estimated to live in rural areas, and 8.5 million individuals with disabilities are estimated to live in rural America. For example, according to Johnstone et al. (2003), women with Traumatic Brain Injuries in rural areas reported more significant problems than women with Traumatic Brain Injuries in urban areas in terms of finances, accessing service providers and systems, transportation, obtaining information, and coordinating services (Johnstone et al., 2003).

According to Bushy and Sebastian (2000), rural residents experience higher levels of depression, alcohol abuse, domestic violence, incest, and child abuse than their urban counterparts. Flinn (2005) highlights how in rural and other geographically remote areas, many people with mental illness have inadequate access to care, limited availability of skilled care providers, lower incomes and greater social stigma for seeking mental health treatment than their urban counter parts. Flinn (2005) continues to explain that there is no reason to assume that consumers of mental health disorders living in rural settings have goals different from individuals living in more urban environments. These consumers, Flinn (2005) elaborates, have barriers, such as increased social stigma, that they must overcome.

Summary

In summary, current research confirms that there is a pressing need for community resources. When counselors are aware of community facilities and direct their clients to these facilities, it improves services. Research also highlights the importance of combining these resources in one database for easy community usage. The second section describes the consumer from a holistic perspective. The many different attributes of an individual interact and impact that individual, affecting the success of vocational rehabilitation service. The section on case management highlights the importance of coordinated services. Cross training among case managers is also important for client success. Although individuals may experience barriers to employment, if the needs of the individual consumer are met, the rehabilitation consumer and consumer can work to remove these barriers. Once a client believes barriers can be overcome, a vision of future employment becomes not just a dream, but a reality. Rehabilitation counselors should act as advocates to promote empowerment and build self-advocacy in the clients. Rural areas are discussed, focusing on the difficulties rehabilitation consumers experience in these areas due to lack of transportation, limited employment opportunities, inadequate training and education options, and limited vocational rehabilitation services.

Chapter 3

METHODOLOGY

Review of Sources

While working as an intern for the California Department of Rehabilitation in the Woodland office in spring of 2011 this author was unable to locate a printed community service directory to use to help the clients of the Department identify important resources they needed. In an attempt to find if such a directory existed this author spoke with the rehabilitation counselors working in the Woodland office, inquiring if they had knowledge of such a directory. The rehabilitation counselors stated that they have not come across such a directory. The counselors did express that such a directory would be very helpful to refer consumers to resources available to them in the community. This author continued her search for a printed directory by visiting the local One-Stop Career Centers, Social Security Office and the EDD office. Although this author was able to locate individual pamphlets for specific agencies there was no all inclusive directory of the different community resources available in the Yolo County. As the printed information that was available in scattered and fragmented sources, this author could not help but think how an all inclusive directory would be a real asset to people in need.

As this author had used the Sacramento Community Service Directory she searched this directory for contacts that might be able to assist her in locating a directory available for the Yolo County area. As a result, this author found and contacted Nancy Findeisen, the President and CEO of the Community Service Planning Council of the Sacramento area that is responsible for putting out the community service directory and 211 data base for the Sacramento area. Ms. Findeisen stated that she did not have knowledge of such a directory existing for Yolo County but could give the author the contact information for Patty Wong, the Yolo County Librarian/Archivist, as she would be the person knowledgeable about if such a directory existed. This author then proceeded to contact Ms. Wong to inquire about the directory. Ms. Wong stated that there was no printed community service directory but there was an online directory called YoloLINK that Ms. Wong is in charge of maintaining. She stated that a printed community service directory was very much needed as there are members of the community that do not have access to the internet or do not have the computer skills to navigate such a site. The author agreed, for while working with consumers at the Department of Rehabilitation she found that many did not have computers to utilize or the computer skills needed to be able to utilize the site. Ms. Wong did state that at the time there were not funds available to have a directory printed and distributed.

With the guidance of this author's advisor, Dr. Guy Deaner, this author decided to put together a community service director that would be beneficial to the consumers that she served at the Woodland Department of Rehabilitation and also to the Yolo County community members. In developing the sub sections of the directory this author focused on areas that she found to be most needed by low-income individuals, based on her experience working with consumers at the Department of Rehabilitation. In addition to compiling the directory in both English and Spanish, this author, in collaboration with PRIDE Industries Foundation also assembled a grant proposal for Wells Fargo Corporate Giving, requesting funds to have the directory printed and distributed. Pride Industries, which PRIDE Industries Foundation is a sub set of, is a leader in vocational training and development, creating jobs for people with disabilities. PRIDE Industries took interest to this project as they have an office in Woodland, California, which is part of the Yolo County area. PRIDE Industries Foundation's aim to enhance employment opportunities for the under-served coincides with Wells Fargo Corporate Giving's aims to assist people in need in Northern California.

Gathering of Information

For the information gathered in chapter 1 and 2 of this project this author first met with Betty Ronayne, the Education Reference Librarian, to learn how to better navigate through the electronic sources databases. Ms. Ronayne showed this author how to use the Sacramento State library electronic article database and books for the research conducted on this project. With this information this author read a variety of academic journal articles related to community services issues, including the Journal of Applied Rehabilitation Counseling and the American Journal of Psychiatric Rehabilitation. This author searched Educational Resources Information Center (ERIC) and EBSCO host found on California State University, Sacramento (CSUS) library's website.

For the data collected for the actual directory, this author first used YoloLINK, an online directory, as a base for information on the community resources in Yolo County. This author also visited the Social Security office in Woodland and West Sacramento and the One Stop Career Center Yolo County and gathered numerous pamphlets and handouts for individual resources and agencies located in Yolo County. Once basic information was compiled the information on the community resources available in Yolo County, the author then telephoned, e-mailed or faxed contact persons in the organization what she had written for their edit and feedback.

According to the United States Census Bureau for 2010, Yolo County has a large Hispanic population that would benefit from being able to access community services information in a Spanish language directory. Since no Spanish language directory was currently available , this author decided to have the English language directory translated into Spanish and add the cost of printing and publishing to the grant proposal.

The next step this author took in completing this project was to identify funders that would be interested in funding the printing of the directory. After reviewing The Only Grant Writing Book You'll Ever Need, (2003) by Ellen Karsh and Arlen Sue Fox to learn more about finding a grant funder, this author consulted the internet for lists of northern California foundations. Many foundations listed on the internet were either non-operational or too specific in their funding areas. Eventually, however, this author was able to locate the Wells Fargo Corporate Giving that funds projects throughout California, including Yolo County. This foundation supports improvement of low-and moderate – income communities and supports projects that revitalize and stabilize communities.

As one of the eligibility requirements for the Wells Fargo Corporate Giving grant was that the organization submitting the grant must be a non-profit this author began researching non-profit organizations that may have been interested in partnering with her on the grant proposal. Research indicated that PRIDE Industries might be a good partner for the grant effort. PRIDE Industries is a non-profit organization that assists individuals with disabilities in finding and retaining employment, through job creation programs, employment preparation and employment supports. This author had worked with PRIDE Industries before and thought they may be interested in partnering on the grant proposal as one of their offices is located in the city of Woodland, part of Yolo County. The author then met with Sharon Mendy, Vice President of Rehabilitation of PRIDE Industries. Sharon Mendy reviewed the community service directory and stated that the PRIDE Industries Foundation, a sub set of PRIDE Industries, would partner with this author on the project.

Chapter 4

SUMMARY AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Summary

The purpose of this project was to develop a community service directory with a compilation of resources intended for the community members of Yolo County.

Appendix A is the Information Asked of Each Agency, Appendix B is A Community Resource Directory for Yolo County, English Version; Appendix C is A Community Service Directory for Yolo County, Spanish Version, Appendix D is grant proposal to Wells Fargo Corporate Giving.

Primary sources of information for Chapter 1 and 2 were obtained through Educational Resources Information Center (ERIC) and Social Service database located on the CSUS library's website. This author also explored many internet resources, for statistics and data. The author also went to CSUS library on to examine journal articles, such as articles from The Journal of Applied Rehabilitation Counseling.

After this author confirmed that there was no printed community service directory available for Yolo County this author proceeded to gather information on local community service agencies. This author first looked to YoloLINK, the online directory for Yolo County as a starting point. The author then visited the local Social Security office and one-stop employment network to gather pamphlets and handouts on the various community service agencies located in Yolo County. The author then proceeded in the collection of information through interviews with agency representatives. Once all of the data was gathered, this author then began constructing the actual directory. After the author compiled the directory in English she then had it translated into Spanish.

A community resource directory for individuals in Yolo County area was developed. By creating a community service directory individuals will have access to information, in either Spanish or English, about community resources available to them in the Yolo County area.

This guide is intended to provide individuals in the Yolo County area with services that can be reviewed and identified as easily as possible. It is this author's belief that this guide can and will be used as a means to connect individuals seeking community resources to the appropriate help they need and deserve in order to live as independently as possible.

Recommendations

Throughout the creation of this guide, it became obvious to this author that frequent updates should be conducted in order to connect individuals in the Yolo County area with the services available. Contact information should be regularly verified as well as information on eligibility and application requirements, due to the fact that these criteria can change often and without warning. When a guide is ready for publication, there will likely be new programs and existing programs will no longer be available. This is why it is important for information to be continuously collected regarding errors, deletions and additions to the community service resource directory, and an updated directory should be published and distributed on an annual basis.

Another recommendation that should be addressed is the need to find means of having the directory continued to be republished each year with current information on each agency. A development of a tool to access the directory's usefulness in regards to increased utilization of community resources by individuals is also recommended.

327 College Street, Suite 204

Woodland CA 95695

530-661-4200

Hours: Office: Monday-Friday, 9 am-5 pm.

Eligibility: Child victims of abuse and neglect from age 0-18 years of age, who are receiving services through Yolo County Welfare Services (CWS) or Child Protection Services (CPS). (They don't advocate for children who are involved in custody disputes.)

Fees: None

Languages: English, Spanish, and Urdu.

Application Procedure: Any member of the community may make a referral for service.

Services Provided: Yolo County Court Appointed Special Advocates (CASA) is a nonprofit organization that recruits, trains, and supervises community volunteers to act as advocates, friends, and mentors for abused and neglected children in Yolo County. By engaging in age-appropriate activities and getting to know the child, a CASA provides the court with pertinent information about the child's background and needs. A CASA reports and makes recommendations to the judge based on the child's best interests. A CASA volunteer is assigned to an abused or neglected child that is receiving services through Yolo County Child Protective Services (CPS) and is engaged with the Yolo Juvenile Court System (Dependency Court). CASAs are involved with an individual case anywhere from 3-18 months, advocating for an abused or neglected child. CASA volunteers must be at least 21 years of age and complete 30 hours of training prior to working with a child. Yolo County CASA also offers a 'School Mentor Program,' in which volunteers mentor children (4-8th grade) living in West Sacramento. Mentorship goals are to increase academic achievement, self-esteem, and social skills through one-to-one interaction. Mentors meet with their mentees one to two hours per week during the school year. Additionally, mentors must be at least 18 years of age and complete 3 hours of training prior to working with a child and undergo a fingerprint and background check and have a tuberculocis (TB) test. Hundreds of children in Yolo County have benefited from having a caring CASA volunteer since Yolo County CASA was established in 1995.

Community Service Grant Proposal to Wells Fargo Corporate Giving

Mario Diaz, Regional Vice President
Wells Fargo Foundation
1 Montgomery Street, 19th Floor,
MAC A0190-198
San Francisco, CA 94104
(415) 623-7598
Email: diazm@wellsfargo.com

Dear: Mr. Diaz,

I am pleased to present this proposal for your review. I look forward to partnering with the Wells Fargo Foundation to provide a community service directory for the members of the Yolo County community.

The objective of the community service directory is to provide the members of Yolo County, including the low-income population, with detailed information regarding the resources available to them and which will increase utilization of these resources. With increased utilization of these resources community members will gain assistance in addressing the circumstances that led to and is continuing their low-income status.

Our proposal requests $3,011 in funding to cover the cost of printing and photocopying the directories and mailing and distribution.

We appreciate Wells Fargo Corporate Giving taking an interest in helping our community members become aware. Please give me a call at if you require any farther information or have any questions concerning this proposal.

Thank you for giving us this opportunity. We look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

Amy Bennett,
Graduate Student Assistant

Statement of Need

According to the 2010 US census in Yolo County the percent of individuals living below poverty level is 17.2 compared with 13.2 % for California. As indicated by these statistics there is a large low income population in Yolo County. The funds requested by the Wells Fargo Corporate giving foundation will serve the low-income population of Yolo County by providing them access to information regarding the numerous community service resources available to them through a printed directory. Currently, there is no complete community service directory available for Yolo County. Although individual pamphlets are available there is no comprehensive, all inclusive directory. This author is requesting support with funding for a community service directory for Yolo County. The directory will come in a Spanish and English version.

A printed community service directory is needed as, according to a study conducted by Hale, Cotton, Drentea and Goldner published in May 2010 in American Behavioral Scientist, that those who live in rural areas use the Internet less than those who live in urban areas. This study notes that individuals in rural areas less internet usage can be attributable to factors such as educational level, income, and diffusion of broadband. There is also shown to be a growing gap between the underprivileged members of society, especially the poor, rural, elderly, and individuals with disabilities portion of the population who do not have access to computers or the internet; and the wealthy, middle-class, and young Americans living in urban and suburban areas who have access. The situations that have led to these individuals low-income status will continue to persist if the information gap to resources that can alleviate these situations is not bridged.

A Spanish version of the Yolo County Community Service Directory is also greatly needed. In Yolo County, according to the 2010 United States census 30% of the population in Yolo County is Hispanic, with 20.6% of the population speaking only Spanish at home. The information divide in the Hispanic population will continue to grow if there is not accessible access to information in their language of origin. The study by conducted by Hale et al. (2010) shows the information divide continues to widen along very specific racial lines. Hispanic households are roughly half as likely to own computers as White households. As would be expected, the gaps between racial groups narrow at higher income levels, but widens among households at lower economic levels. Hispanic households are nearly 2.5 times less likely to use the internet than White households. In the Hispanic community, it was observed that computers were a luxury, not a need; computer activities isolated individuals and took away valuable time from family activities.

There is also need for support for this project as there is a lack of funding available for a resource directory to be printed and distributed. This is a significant problem as the resources identified in the directory will continue to go unused if the information on these resources is not accessible to the community. This projects aim is to service all low-income community members of Yolo County.

Organization Description

PRIDE Industries Foundation expands opportunities for individuals with disabilities. PRIDE Industries Foundation is a not-for-profit organization that creates jobs for individuals with disabilities through its own business divisions and through partnership with others in the community. Services also include employment preparation and job development to on-going employment supports.

Four years ago PRIDE Industries saw that there was a need for services in Yolo County and opened an office in Woodland, California, a city at the center of Yolo County. Since this time PRIDE Industries has provided much needed employment services to individuals with disabilities in the Yolo County area.

Program Description

The project that funding is being requested for is a community service directory that will encompass information regarding community resources that will assist low-income individuals. The directory will include sections on emergency food resources, meals services, housing and shelter services, employment services, clothing and personal good resources, transportation services, child care services, crisis intervention, disability services, education financial assistance, health care, library services, mental and health, older adult services, substance abuse services, legal and criminal justice services, support groups and youth services. The description of each agency will list the agency name, address, telephone number, hours, eligibility, fees, languages, application procedures, and services provided.

We are requesting in funds in the amount of $6,022 to cover the cost of printing/photocopying and mailing/distribution. The compiling of resources and translation from English to Spanish has been done by volunteer work.

The expected outcome of this project is that the low-income English and Spanish speaking community members of Yolo County will be able to have access to information on community service resources, identify the resources they are in need of and utilize these resources so that they receive the assistance needed to alleviate the circumstance that continue their low-income status, in turn revitalizing and stabilizing the Yolo County community.
